

Kelway acquires Repton

Kelway customers gain access to advanced end-to-end infrastructure services

A message from Phil Doye, CEO, Kelway:

Dear Customer

In another major move forward in Kelway's commitment to offering world class IT services and solutions, Kelway has acquired IT infrastructure specialist Repton. Swiftly following the acquisition of Panacea Services earlier this year, this places Kelway very much in the top tier of UK IT solution providers with annual combined sales now fast approaching £200m.

Why has Kelway acquired Repton?

- Repton is known for providing world-class IT solutions drawing on the highest levels of technical expertise and long-standing relationships with the industry's leading technology vendors
- Those professional standards are demonstrated by multiple accreditations including IBM Premier Business Partner, Sun Executive Partner, Cisco Silver Partner and HP Gold Preferred Partner
- From network services to data centres, security to virtualisation, Repton brings an enterprise-class extension to our existing solutions and services capabilities.

What does this mean to you as a Kelway customer?

Simple. Alongside our existing products and services, you can now take advantage of an enhanced capability in advanced infrastructure design and delivery. Your day-to-day contacts will remain the same - but you can now talk to us with even more confidence about your most high-level IT requirements.

If you have any questions about our newly expanded offering, please contact your account manager. For now, let me say on behalf of Kelway how much we value your continued business - and how much we look forward to serving you even further in the future.

With best regards,
